

Map 20.2 Major trade routes of medieval Europe. By the eleventh century, overland, river, and maritime trade routes created a commercial network that linked all parts of Europe. These routes also facilitated trade between European Christians and Muslims in the Mediterranean basin and southwest Asia. What does the high volume of commerce suggest about the state of the medieval European economy?